These young people, for they are not all of one sex, are merely symbols of an ignorance which goes a long way towards making Milton - to mention the chief among many - a shut book to the modern world. There is a story that a professor at one of our largest universities discovered that no one in a group of Juniors and Seniors could identify Judas Iscariot; exasperated, he cried out: Gentlemen, is there anyone in the room who has heard of Jesus Christ! The fact that one student took the question seriously and raised his hand is humorous, if you like; but the story, as Carlyle would have said, is significant of much. The obvious argument, drawn from the facts, is that English teachers should encourage,...
